This course is a broad exploration of the natural and built American Landscape, and how the unique character of American culture continues to shape this place. Opportunities to explore and experience landscapes on the ground and in person are supplemented by readings, discussions, projects and recorded lectures. The ever-changing dialogue between man and nature will be examined, including the growing sustainability movement, natural and cultural preservation efforts, regional growth, agriculture and transportation. The ultimate goal of the course is to have a greater understanding of the design of American Landscapes, from early Puebloan villages, modern urban plazas and National Park trail systems.

more information: http://wendylotze.faculty.arizona.edu/